Poetic idea

"You have just said yes to my love,
after I kissed you, and I am so happy!"

Background

Lotti sang as a choirboy under Legrenzi's direction at St. Mark's Cathedral in Venice; later in life he became the music director there. He also wrote about 30 operas and many cantatas, but the origin of this aria is not known.

Source

Manuscript D. 7132, Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Introduction (labelled ritornello) for strings in four parts. Aria for voice (soprano clef) and continuo. Key: E Major.

Inside the cover of this large manuscript volume is written in English, 32 Arias by Sigr. Anto. Lotti. At the head of each aria the copyist has written in Italian "Del Sigr. Anto. Lotti." "Pur dicesci" is the only aria that is primarily accompanied only by continuo, the others all having string orchestra accompaniment throughout. Because various aria texts refer to such matters as Rome, emperor and heroes, it appears that the arias come from opere serie (serious operas), which were always based on stories from antiquity. There is no indication which aria comes from which opera or operas.

This manuscript is the probable source used by François Auguste Gevaert to prepare his anthology Les Gloires de l'Italie (Paris: private subscription, 1868). He made far fewer changes in the arias he edited than were usual for other editors of his time, and he used additional staves to present suggested vocal ornaments.

sweet fountain off[-the] pleasure.

Unfortunately, he proposed some ornaments that are impossible to perform without drastically slowing down the tempo. These should be omitted or adapted to one's personal abilities.

Parisotti borrowed nine of Gevaert's editions for his Arie Antiche. The alterations that he made in this aria have been eliminated from this edition.
